THE ADVERTISER'S SEMI-WEEKLY

Lack of Confidence

CONFIDENCE is the cornerstone of the commercial world, the foundation on which all credits rest, and credit is the material backbone of finance. Capital investment alone never made an industry. Hawaii has the accumulated capital, experience, and skill in the production of marketable commodities, confidence in its own ability to do, but lack of faith in what the government will permit it to undertake.

The sugar industry stands today like a high-powered machine, geared and tuned to enormous potential capacity, ready to undertake heavier tasks, to carry greater loads, but without a governor on the engine and nothing to prevent its parts racing and racking to pieces if the full power is turned on.

Hawaii is a conservative community in business affairs. It has inherited, a conservatism born of bitter experience. This is no new land, although the youngest of the American commonwealths. Its present-day commercial and industrial life is the remainder after much wasted capital has been subtracted. In the last ninety years many industries have grown, flowered and perished and Hawaii has become wise and cautious. Youthful imagination and daring have passed with the days of youth, for even though this community is a new one from the American point of view, it had reached manhood's full estate long before annexation. Its dreams are tempered with that conservatism which is self-reliance and knowledge of inborn power. It weighs promises and judges intention by results.

And so it comes that wise, old, conservative Hawaii does not accept the dreams that others imagine for it, except as dreams. Experience has proved that sugar cannot be produced at a living profit in normal times in direct competition with other lands having certain advantages denied to all American communities. Mature Hawaiian conservatism cannot imagine a successful outcome from such direct competition.

Other cane countries have cheaper labor, richer soils and better transportation facilities, the first two advantages being those which cannot be overcome. The principle involved is economic and is recognized as such.

By choice, by birth, by tradition and environment we are Americans, holding to certain tenets of having belief as they affect the doctrine of individual rights, having certain civic ideals, believing in the higher standards of living, education and charity. But with all that, experience has taught us that these higher ideals cannot be maintained if the commercial foundation is lacking. The going industries are what feed the people and employ them with profit to themselves and the community.

Experience has taught Hawaii that its main industry cannot compete in its entirety with lands having certain advantages impossible for us to obtain. Some plantations could continue to earn profits with sugar selling at three cents or less in the world's markets. The majority could not, and conservative Hawaii would not attempt it. Our business men would simply seek some other field of operations and divert so much of their capital as they could salvage, to other industries. As long as prices are abnormal because of war time conditions the planters will take their profits. They would be foolish not to. Delaying the final settlement of the fundamentals on which the industry has grown up, another four years, does not conduce to faith in the future of the cane sugar industry in Hawaii, and does not increase the faith of the people of Hawaii in the political good sense and acumen of the administration. The war profits of the next few years are something that the administration did not give us and cannot take from us. It is inevitable that they will some day cease and then the economic principles underlying the proposition will again rule the situation. Postponement of that solution four years does not create friends for the political party in present control of the administration.

Ten-Cent Sugar!

YESTERDAY the quotations for granulated sugar jumped to $7.15 a hundred and the price for Hawaiian raws was established at a small fraction under six cents a pound, 5.96¢ to be exact, with the intimation that under heavy buying there would be a still further advance. This is due to the simple reason that there is a demand for more sugar than is in sight.

The steadily rising market has been forecasted by the ones in possession of the facts of the sugar situation. The New York Herald, on March 21, talked about ten-cent sugar. On that date the Herald said:

"To what price sugar may rise no one would make a guess yesterday in the sugar district. The world situation affecting that food staple is unprecedented. In general terms, the world, outside of Germany, Austria and their allies, wants 4,000,000 tons of sugar. The sugar in sight amounts to only about 3,000,000 tons. The sugar crop of Cuba is the largest in its history. Planting of cane was stimulated by the high prices and the weather has made this a favorable growing season. With all these conditions the total Cuban crop cannot exceed 3,000,000 tons.

"In ordinary conditions a crop of that size in Cuba would mean refined sugar at 3½¢ a pound wholesale in this country. The price of sugar yesterday at wholesale was 7¢ a pound. This refers to fine granulated sugar, the basis of price for refined sugars and the staple of that commodity as sold for consumption.

"Price will take its usual part in controlling the equalization of supply and demand should sugar continue to rise. Ten cents a pound is freely predicted, especially in the western part of this country, where wholesalers have been expecting that increase for some weeks. If sugar goes to 10¢ its excessive cost to the consumer will result in greater economy in its use. In the sugar market district here this natural equalization was the subject of discussion as a principal check on a continued rise in price.

"That sugar is likely to go higher was a general impression near the foot of Wall street, where are collected the offices of the great refineries, the brokers and the experts of all kinds in the sugar trade.

"The war is the cause of the prices. England in 1915 consumed 1,900,000 tons of sugar. The campaign for reduction of consumption of luxuries there is expected to reduce that amount to 1,500,000 tons this year. England has bought 400,000 tons of raw sugar in Cuba, and about 100,000 tons of refined sugar here. Experts calculate that England will want 1,250,000 tons more, which must come out of the current crop of Cuba, calculated at 3,000,000 tons. She will supply her allies.

"Germany and Austria supplied the greater part of the sugar consumed in England, Switzerland and other European countries before the war. They do not supply any of it now, and that means withdrawal from the world's supply, outside of the Teutonic countries, of more than a million tons a year."

"His Excellency" on Kauai

GOVERNOR PINKHAM is still on the Garden Island and still vamping garrulosity of the things he is going to do. The latest advice from Kauai state that the Governor's visit there has made it plain to the Kauaians why nearly two years have passed without anything being done in regard to the main question concerning their island. The Governor made two public speeches, in neither of which was there one definite statement, and he talked to a large number of people without pledging action along any line. He bubbled over with egotism, proclaimed his honesty and fearlessness from the housetops and querulously informed the Kauai chamber of commerce that his efforts were not appreciated.

After listening to him, the people of Kauai understood. They had then every reason to know why the Governor fails to measure up to the requirements of his office in any particular. To the plantation men he was obsequious; to the homesteaders he was as nearly tyrannical as was possible, but to neither did he appear capable of making one clear-cut, understandable statement, either regarding his pitiful dillydallying of the past or his probable meanderings of the future.

In Lihue, when prodded by the frankness of some of the chamber of commerce speakers, he repeated his stock excuse that the delay concerning the Lihue railroad license and the relief of the Kapaa homesteaders was due to "a fight between the plantations," but failed utterly to make his allegation good when his words were flatly denied to his face by Hans Isenberg.

He was challenged to face Albert Horner and deny that he had openly expressed his hostility to homesteaders in general or to explain, if he were able, his statement that he had deliberately played with the railroad proposal for eighteen months in order to assist in the plot to break the homesteaders' backs and render fruitless their efforts to develop homes on their own lands. He squirmed before the challenge but failed to answer.

Governor Pinkham had a good deal to say about the "wholly unjustified, inspired communications to the press" and about the "vicious attacks" made upon him and his "friends of a decade and a half," but in not one instance did the Governor dare to take up for refutation any of the allegations made, either by the press itself or by those quoted in the press.

Except that it gave the Kauai residents a chance to see and hear for themselves the only excuse for the fuddling of the past two years in their urgent necessities, the visit of the Governor to the Garden Islands accomplished nothing. The Governor learned no new facts. The officials in what he calls "my cabinet" had a chance to gather some necessary information whenever they could shake "His Excellency" and get away from his eternal reminiscences, but they could have accomplished greatly more if they had not been trailing the Governor en masse.

"The Government," which is the chief executive's new name for himself, used repeatedly in his Lihue speech, is still on Kauai, where he is still going "to see if anything concrete can be brought about" in the matter of the formation of a company to conserve and distribute water for irrigation. He may be able to reach a conclusion, but if he does it will be for about the first time since he took office.

The government of Mexico is probably waiting for the government of Germany to reply to the Lusitania demands before it replies to the request for the use of the Mexican railroad lines. It appears to be a case of "After you, my dear Wilhelm."

BOARD OF RETAIL

TRADES FAILS TO

ELECT OFFICERS

COMMITTEE IS APPOINTED TO NOMINATE CHAIRMAN AND VICE-CHAIRMAN FOR BODY

DOLLAR-DAY SCHEME FOR HONOLULU IS APPROVED

WORK FOR LOWER RATES FROM BIG EASTERN CITIES BEING PUSHED FORWARD

There was just a quorum present at the meeting of the board of retail trades in the chamber of commerce yesterday, and the election of officers was postponed until the next meeting. A committee, consisting of Julius Unger, Merle M. Johnson and Benjamin Sammons was appointed to nominate candidates for chairman and vice chairman.

In the absence of S. S. Pearson, E. A. Bernier was appointed temporary chairman and the business of the meeting except the election, was carried on. A report from the committee which has been investigating the scheme of a "dollar day" for Honolulu, reported that in its opinion the proposition is a good one and should be boosted, but that this is not the time. It was suggested that September or October would be the best time. The report was discussed and adopted and the committee was requested to file a supplementary report later on the matter.

Ed. Towse of the vigilance committee, reported that he had done considerable work on the matter of getting through rates on freight in less than carload lots from the Atlantic seaboard and Chicago by rail and steamer, and had taken the matter up with the interstate commission. He was still in correspondence with it.

He has come to the conclusion, he said, that the "little man" would be the one to be benefited by the proposed change in rates, as the importers now had all that is coming to them in the matter of tariffs. The work of this committee will be carried on to a definite conclusion.

The matter of the bankruptcy repeal bill now before congress, was discussed but no action taken. It was shown by the fact that the great business houses of the mainland are endeavoring to have the bankruptcy law repealed.

Figures quoted showed that the loss through bankruptcy proceedings in the country totaled about half a billion a year of which but about seven per cent is recoverable. This loss should not be fastened of bankruptcy proceedings in this territory where men went through the courts for debts aggregating but $600 on salaries of $125 a month were mentioned. The loss to the merchants was direct. It was also stated that the loss through bankruptcy in this Territory especially, is not near so great as the loss to the storekeepers from the bad debts written off each year. No action was taken on this matter.

The Stevens bill regulating resale prices, was discussed by those present to familiarize themselves with its provisions as it will be taken up at the regular meeting of the chamber next week. No action further than a general discussion was had.

M. von Holt, trustee of the estate of Geoffrey Rhodes, deceased, against Ada Tree Rhodes Williamson and Ellen Tree Williamson, a minor. "The motion of counsel for Ellen Tree Williamson, the said infant," concludes the decision, "for the allowance of attorney's fees out of the trust estate, is denied."

DOGS QUARANTINE

NEVER SHOULD BE

RAISED IN HAWAII

Warning is given to Promotion Committee in Connection With Women Tourists

HILL INTERESTS WILL

RUN PERMANENT LINER

THIS IS BELIEF EXPRESSED BY MR. THURSTON, WHO TELLS OF MAINLAND PUBLICITY

Quarantine of dogs and publicity for the islands, rubbed shoulders with additional data on the coming of the Great Northern, and L. A. Thurston's trip to the mainland, at the last regular meeting of the promotion committee.

Dr. Victor Norgaard, head of the division of animal industry, bureau of agriculture, who had been asked to address the committee on the question of abandoning the quarantine of dogs before admitting them to the islands, declared that such a step would be "nothing short of a calamity." The animal expert declared that no precautions against the introduction of rabies into Hawaii could be too great, provided they were successful. He told the committee that the 120-day quarantine now insisted upon for all dogs from the mainland is a matter of simple justice to the humans and dogs of Hawaii.

"If rabies once creeps into the Territory it will result in the practical extinction of the dog life of the islands. Many of our dogs will die of the disease and the rest will have to be killed off to prevent the spread of the disease among humans."

LAP DOG NO EXCEPTION

Referring to the statement of a wealthy woman, who wished to come here, but who refused to come unless her lap dog, "a tiny, dear little fellow who cannot possibly do any one any harm," Doctor Norgaard said that "size of the dog cuts no figure. A lap dog can spread rabies just as well as a giant boar hound or a St. Bernard."

He told of another wealthy woman, who, when told that the introduction of her lap dog within quarantine might mean the loss of a human life, said: "Well, suppose it does. The Washington bureau says that a human life is worth $2500, I'll put up a bond for ten of them if you'll let my dog in."

L. A. Thurston talked to the committee on his trip to San Francisco in connection with the effort to induce the management of the Great Northern Pacific Steamship Company to continue the trips of the Great Northern to the islands. He declared that his observations while in the Coast city led him to believe that ultimately the company will be forced to consider the Hawaiian end of the line's business the big end. The business to these islands, he added, can be developed, but it is becoming more doubtful whether the coastwise run between San Francisco and Portland can be made to pay from the passenger traffic point of view.

COAST RUN NOT SATISFACTORY

It was true, he said, that the Great Northern and Northern Pacific had been built for the coast city, but the company is determined to give them a thorough try out, but the support of the traveling public so far has not been satisfactory.

PROMOTION IN MAINLAND

Mr. Thurston also spoke of the work that is being done in the mainland by F. Walter Scott and F. J. Hall, the representatives of the promotion committee in California, and told of their plans for extending the publicity work that is being done. These men, he said, have already won splendid results, and are going after a bigger field. Halton has been authorized to go East, visiting Chicago, New York and other big cities, and getting in touch with all of the tourist agencies.

The committee, after hearing what Mr. Thurston had done, tendered him a vote of thanks for his work.

The committee also definitely set the date for the coming trip to Kauai for Tuesday. Tourists will be invited to make the journey with the committee, as has been done in the past with good results.

QUEEN STREET REOPENED

The work of repairing Queen street is now completed. It was done under the personal supervision of City Engineer G. M. Collins and he is inclined to believe that with little care it should last for at least five years unless something very unusual happens to it.
